Duration: 9 mins 18 secs • ASR AUD 6,358 • TAS • Australia • ANU - Broadcast • ID: X00085236440

Interview with BirdLife Australia National Public Affairs Manager Sean Dooley. Compton says BirdLife Australia is shocked but not surprised after the new ANU research found populations of swift parrots are lower than previously realised or less than 300 birds. Dooley travels around Australia to break records for most birds spotted in a year. He notes the study used genetics. Dooley says swift parrots and orange-bellied parrots breed in Tas. He notes swift parrots move where they breed. Dooley describes swift parrots. Dooley says the NSW Government investigates the NSW Forestry Department's plan to expand logging in remaining areas unburned by the 2019 bushfires. He notes trees in Tas where swift parrots are nesting are still being cut down annually.

Interview with Dejan Stojanovic, researcher, Australian National University. Breaden says new research from the Australian National University painted a bleak picture for the endangered Swift Parrot. Breaden says there could be fewer than 300 parrots left in the wild. Stojanovic says the parrots are facing several problems including deforestation. Stojanovic admits that they are also surprised by the results of their research across Tasmania. Stojanovic explains how they estimate the population through DNA through genetic diversity with the samples they collected. He says the parrot is a small bright green bird with a red face. He mentions some of the dangers the Swift Parrot faces around their breeding habitat, specifically in Tasmania. He says the scale of deforestation is so large that wildlife species are now being affected.

Interview with Dejan Stefanovic, ANU. Vidot says the wildlife was affected by the bushfires, adding the threatened population of the swift parrot is affected. She says new research from the ANU claims there could only be 300 left in their population. Stefanovic says the species has been threatened for a long time, adding last summer's bushfires was just another nail in the coffin. He notes there has been widespread deforestation of their habitat. He says the whole population migrates to Tasmania during summer. He states they are using micro satellites and analytical techniques to estimate their population. He notes they are confident with their estimate because they sampled the whole population across their breeding range. He says things have worsened, adding the management of their forest habitat in Tasmania had been bad for a long time. He says forest logging in Tasmania is still an ongoing issue. He suggests holding logging in critical habitats.
